The only desirable object to be attained by new legislation at this time on that subject is to make a shorter time bond with a lower rate of years, on practically a 3 per cent basis. It seems, therefore, that it will be wiser, safer, and better for the financial and business interests of the country to rely upon an existing law with which to meet the present emergency rather than to encounter the delays and uncertainties of the subject is rendered more imperative by the fact that the condition of the treasury admits of but little, if any, de-lay, and of no uncertainty at all in the final action to be taken.

"It would be triffing with a very grave affair to pretend that new legislation concerning the issue of bonds can be accomplished at this time and in the midst of present elements and parties in public life, without elaborate, extensive and practically indefinite debate. It is also obvious to every one that the consideration and discussion of the tariff now going on in Congress will render any financial legislation at this time far more difficult

Mr. Justice Brewer, the president of the alumni, acted as toastmaster and filled the post to the utmost satisfaction of all. The toasts were well selected and the response

After the generous menu had been discussed, Justice Brewer rose and said as it was apparent that those present had destroyed all before them, it was time to turn to other matters. He referred proudly to his Alma Mater, and read some interesting statistics, which showed that Yale was keeping abreast of the times. The senior class of 1801, he said, by way of comparison, had thirty-six members, with a population of only 6,000,000 in the country. In 1840 the population had grown to 17,000,000, and Yale, true to her principle of enterprise, has increased her senior class to 102. During 1803 the population of the United States was 65,000,000, and the graduating class of that year had grown to the enormous proportions of 378. The speaker created considerable merriment by reading the rules in vogue at Yale in 1843. The past of Yale, he concluded, was too well known to need comment. His sons had made its history and would take care of its future. He called upon Senator Higgins to respond to the toast, "The Future of Yale."

Senator Higgins' Talk. Somehow or other, said Senator Higgins, whenever this country required a good man to administer its laws, it called upon Yale men. Why, when President Cleveland started out, the first thing he did was to select a Yale man for Postmaster General, and the latter, not to be outdone, appointed a Yale man to assist him. Then there's the Su-preme Court of the Uunited States, with preme Court of the United States, with such Yale men as Justices Brewer, Brown and Shiras to represent it. In fact, continued the speaker, it may turn out that Yale will be called upon to help President A Yale will be called upon to help President Stevenson, who delivered a brief address, which was generously applicated. His subject was "The Lawyer." In his speech he said:

"Politics has been defined 'the science of government; in its highest sense it is the science in action of human affairs. I disserted upon some solid foundation. Yale cellege stood pre-eminent among the college says far better than it was the preceding was far better than it was the preceding was far better than it was the preceding year, and today, he thought it a far better school than the year previous. "Politics has been defined 'the science of government,' in its highest sense it is the suffering the head of human affairs. I dissent from what I conceive to be pernicious teaching that the lawyer must hold himself aloof from politics—which means to hands other than his own must be committed his dearest interests. Yale College had helped New England to keep in the front rank of enterprise, and the college had sent out those recruits that supplied bench, bar and pulpit with the country's shining lights. He had no concern as to the future. Everyone to the primaries of the concern as to what controls the primaries of the cauchy must be primaries of the responsibilities which attach to citizenship in a free government. Judge Townsend's Figures. Judge W. K. Townsend gave some "Ru-mors from the Campus." Last Friday he said when he left Yale, there were 2,202 nurslings at the bosom of Mother Yale. He compared Yale with Harvard in point seniors at Yale, 40 more juniors, and 74 more sophomores. The increase last year had been 50 per cent greater than Harvard. This was the largest increase in the history of the university (applause). Then again there had been 12 new buildings erected during the administration of President Dwight. The Vanderbilt building, costing $500,000, was nearly completed and the college had recently purchased 75 per cent of all the ground opposite the old alumni hall. A new law building, costing nearly $100,000, would shortly be erected on Elm street. Soon the old college would be enclosed by a cordon of handsome buildings. The college has received $5,000,000 and several buildings. This was unprecedented in the history of the college.

umphant Tiger," Justice Brewer said he neid in his hand a lottery ticket, dated 1753, for the benefit of the College of New Jersey. Princeton is a child of Yale. He told the story of how a drunken fellow was taken down by a bully whom he had been introduced to as the son of General Grant, and when he finally gathered himself together, said he knew it was Grant's son, because he fought like him. So it was with Princeton; if she beat Yale, it was because she was an offspring of the because she was an offspring of who was to respond to the toast of Yale democracy, the toastmaster called upon Mr. Justice Brown. He said in the Supreme Court the Yale men held the balance of power, and they claimed the credit of the good decisions. He never could understand why President Harrison had appointed him, unless it was to keep a watch on Justice Brewer. The first month he spent Justice Brewer. The first month he spent in wondering how he got there. The next was taken up wondering how Justice Brewer got there, and since that time he has been wondering how the rest got there. It was his impression that President Harrison had appointed him to keep a watch on Justice Brewer, and later had appointed Justice Shiras to wetch them both There Justice Shiras to watch them both. There was a crying need, he said, for another Yale man on the bench. The President could not go astray by appointing men who have imbibed the sound constitutional principles in a four years' course at Yale. INTEREST TO INVENTORS.

Dr. Gatling said further that the laws Congress had been very salutary for the inventor. There was need of amending mand for better quarters for the 600 or 500 intelligent employes who were working in the badly ventilated basement of the patent office. He urged also improvements in the patent system, some of which were whose principal inaction is the destruction of the safeguards of laws and constitutions: with the rapid increase in every field of endeavor, of appliances which mercilessly dispense with the labor of human hands, and with population pressing upon the means of subsistence—who can doubt that from all these may spring dangers to society, to the state, unknown to the first century of the republic?

"The all-important inquiry, then, is wherein will lie our safety? Who can doubt that has cost our race the struggle of centuries to achieve? As in the past, the lawyer will stand for the existing order of things—for liberty regulated by law. It will be his to conserve, to strengthen, not to destroy, the foundation of our social fabric. In a degree that words cannot measure, our protection will be in our courts of justice. An incorruptible and intelligent judiciary will prove indeed our city of refuge.

"It needs no prophet to foretell that the coming century will witness a general diffusion of information among all classes of our people, and an advancement along all lines of useful and polite learning, unknown to the century now closing. Along the pathway that leads into new fields of thought and of endeavor, whether in the sciences, or a fairs, the lawyer who would maintain the prestige of his profession must tread."
